An unusual person

I once looked on TV about people with very good memory. It was for foreigners with good memory to travel around the world and meet people with excellent memory.

One of them, however, was a scene where he met the real protagonist of the movie Rainman. Rainman is a movie starring Dustin Hoffman and is remembered as a movie about this person's life.

This real person is said to die soon after being born as a deformed child. However, on the other hand, he was born with an outstanding talent. You can say that he was born with extremes. For example, when he read a book in seconds, he open the book and look at the left page with my left eye, and the right page with my right eye. And he memorizes all the capitals of the world, memorizes all the historical figures and dates, and even how old he is if he is alive today.

When a person is born, he is born ordinary or exceptional, but like this person, he is born with extremes. I'll see it as an unusual case. However, as a result of overcoming these shortcomings and developing strengths, I felt that it could be a real movie-like life that benefits society and makes movies.

We tend to think that we can work properly only when they were born normal. When they see someone else who is a little strange or unusual, they look at them once more. When people on the street see such a person, they look at him again and whisper among themselves as they pass by. It seemed to denigrate that it was not normal. Of course, we don't know what reason he was born that way, but it seems too much to dismiss it as the responsibility of the person concerned.

Sometimes there are people around you who seem a little ignorant. Is it their responsibility? Not necessarily. They might have missed the opportunity to study, or they might not have been able to attend a regular school because they were born to hate studying. It seems that there is nothing wrong with the person's life just because he is not good at math or English. However, if they are a little behind others or lack something, adults and parents often go wrong because they write it down badly, even though they are having a hard time.

Many data show that people can be acquired. In fact, there are often people like that. We know that it is people who change depending on who they meet or what kind of mentor they meet. In addition, those who have helped like that will be a great blessing in themselves. There are many people anywhere who want to practice the truth that the giver is blessed. How many people live more grateful to meet an opportunity to be better or to accidentally give what they have!
